Taylor Garrett of 'The A-List: Dallas' reports being assaulted

Taylor Garrett, the gay Republican cast member from The A-List Dallas, claims he was assaulted on Friday night, Nov. 11 in Dallas by someone who carved "Fuck Coulter" into the side of his vehicle.

It marks the second time in six weeks Garrett has reported being targeted for his association with conservative commentator Ann Coulter and for being a gay Republican. Last month, Garrett reported that a rock with a threatening note attached was thrown at the window of his Dallas Design District apartment. Some gay bloggers have alleged that Garrett falsified the report about the rock as a publicity stunt in advance of the premiere of The A-List Dallas.

We don't know much about last Friday's incident beyond what's already been reported, but we did manage to track down a copy of the police report Garrett filed.

Sr. Cpl. Gerardo Monreal, a spokesman for the Dallas Police Department, said Monday there had been no arrests, and he was unsure whether the case had been assigned to a detective yet. According to the report, the suspect is described as a white male, approximately 6 feet, 2 inches tall. The suspect had a dark beard and was wearing a baseball hat.

The incident occurred at 10:20 p.m. at 2800 Knight St. (near Congress Avenue), where Garrett had parked his blue 2008 Audi. According to the Daily Caller, a conservative website that broke the story, Garrett was returning to his car to retrieve a birthday gift for a friend when he noticed the suspect. According to the police report, Garrett yelled for the suspect to get away from the car. That's when the suspect punched him in the face, causing him to fall to the ground and strike his head against the concrete. Garrett suffered a bloody nose and a cut to his ear. He returned to the party a few blocks away before calling authorities. He was treated at the scene by paramedics from Dallas Fire-Rescue.

Jason Shumaker, a spokesman for Logo, the network that is airing The A-List Dallas, said Monday morning that Garrett was traveling all day and unavailable for comment. Shumaker didn't respond to follow-up emails later in the week.

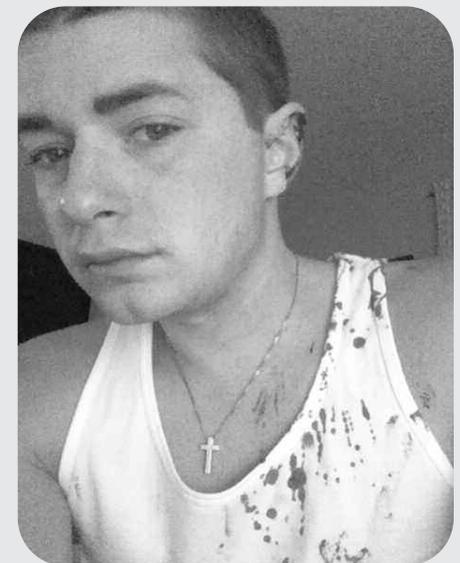

GOProud, a gay conservative group with which Garrett is affiliated, alleged on Twitter last weekend that the incident was an example of "anti-conservative violence from the hateful gay-left (again)."

UPDATE: Laura Martin, the Dallas Police Department's LGBT liaison officer, said a detective has been assigned to the case and has already spoken with Garrett.

"We're definitely aware of it and we're looking at it and we're in contact with him," Martin said Monday afternoon. "There are no leads at this point."

Martin said Garrett was unable to provide any additional info about the suspect, beyond what was in the initial report. She also confirmed that Garrett declined to wait for physical evidence services — or PES — which means police weren't able to take photographs or attempt to get fingerprints from the side of the vehicle.

"Obviously there is damage to his vehicle and there is damage to his face, so it does appear that he was assaulted," Martin said. "We just don't know by whom."

TRUE BLOOD | Taylor Garrett provided this photo to The Daily Caller, the conservative website he contacted to report that he'd been attacked in Oak Lawn last weekend.

Martin said regardless, the incident doesn't appear to be a hate crime.

"From reading the report, it sounds like he was targeted again for his political views and his association with Ann Coulter," she said. "Unless he was targeted strictly because he was gay, it's not a hate crime."

Calif. high court says Prop 8 backers should have standing

The California Supreme Court issued an advisory ruling on Thursday, Nov. 17, indicating that ProtectMarriage.com has standing to appeal a trial court's ruling that Proposition 8 is unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court issued the decision after being asked to do so earlier this year by the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court's opinion is an advisory ruling only, which means that the appellate court is not bound by its findings. The 9th Circuit judges, however, have previously indicated they would follow the Supreme Court's decision.

Prop 8, approved by California voters the same year that Barack Obama was elected president, was ruled unconstitutional in the summer of 2010 by District Judge Vaughn Walker, who has since retired. The amendment was defended in court by ProtectMarriage.com, the primary backer of the Prop 8 referendum, after California Attorney General Jerry Brown refused to defend it in court. Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger also failed to defend the amendment in court.

When ProtectMarriage.com appealed Walker's ruling to the appellate court, the three-judge panel chosen to hear the case heard oral arguments in early December 2010 and a month later asked the state Supreme Court to weigh in on the question of standing. Now the wait begins to see if the 9th Circuit abides by the Supreme Court's ruling on standing, and how the appellate court will rule on the merits of the case.

TDOR: 'Everyone deserves to be mourned'

Services planned this weekend in Dallas and Fort Worth to remember, honor the more than 200 trans people murdered worldwide in the last year

nash@dallasvoice.com

Marcal Camero Tye, 25, was a friendly, outgoing young woman who got along well with most people in the small town of Forrest City, Ark., where she lived — despite the fact that she was openly transgender in such a conservative atmosphere.

But sometime after leaving a party at a friend's house on the evening of March 7, somebody murdered Marcal Tye.

Investigators say that Tye, whose body was found early in the morning of March 8 on a rural road outside Forrest City, was shot in the head and then run over by a car, her body apparently getting caught in the vehicle's undercarriage and dragged for some distance.

St. Frances County Sheriff Bobby May has insisted that the killing was just "a regular murder" and not a hate crime. But those who knew Tye and LGBT activists who have been following the crime believe Tye was killed because she was transgender.

Marcal Tye is just one of the 22 trans people murdered over the last 12 months who will be remembered by name during Transgender Day of Remembrance services on Sunday at the Interfaith Peace Chapel in Dallas. And she is just one of 221 trans people murdered worldwide in the last year, according to the Trans Murder Monitoring Project.

Transgender Day of Remembrance began in November 1999 when trans activists and their allies gathered in San Francisco for a candlelight vigil to remember Rita Hester, a trans woman who had been stabbed to death a year earlier in her apartment in Allston, Mass., just outside of Boston.

Her murder has never been solved.

"There had been a candlelight vigil the year before in December, right after she was killed, there in Boston. But a year later, people felt the need to do something to bring attention to her murder and to the murders of other trans people," explained Erin Roberts, one of the organizers of this year's TDOR service.

"Just six weeks before Rita Hester was murdered, Matthew Shepard was murdered in Wyoming, and that made headlines around the world. Everybody was talking about his murder, talking about doing something about hate crimes. But when Rita Hester was killed, very few people paid any attention. It seemed like nobody really paid attention when a trans person was murdered," Robert said.

"And it's not that we have any problem with all the publicity around Matthew Shepard's murder. It was a horrible thing, and it deserved that attention," Roberts continued. "But there was just such a stark contrast in the way the two murders were treated, especially in the press. People wanted to do something to bring attention to the fact that trans people are murdered every day in horrible, brutal ways."

Also on the list of those killed in the past 12 months are six trans women who were killed in a

Charter school won't reconsider coach's firing

Nichole Williams says Life School Waxahachie fired her as a teacher, coach because she is a lesbian; school officials won't discuss their reasons

JOHN WRIGHT | Senior Political Writer
wright@dallasvoice.com

WAXAHACHIE — Ever since she played girls basketball in high school, Nichole Williams has dreamed of one day coaching the sport.

This year her dream was about to come true after she was named varsity girls basketball coach at Life School Waxahachie, a charter high school 30 miles south of Dallas.

Then, just one day before basketball practice began in October, Williams was abruptly fired.

The 26-year-old Williams, who also taught ninth-grade geography and was an assistant volleyball coach, filed a grievance alleging she was terminated based on her sexual orientation, which reportedly became known to school officials after her fiancée began attending volleyball games this fall.

"I feel like they just ripped it all away from me for absolutely nothing," Williams said. "That's the hard part, and that's what makes me sick."

"The story is, we're still being persecuted," Williams told Dallas Voice. "That's a strong word, but it's true. The fact that as teachers in a professional world, you still have to hide who you are, it's not fair. I don't think anybody should have to hide who they are."

An administrator at Life School, which has 3,700 students at five campuses in North Texas, including one in Oak Cliff, denied this week that Williams was fired for being gay. However, citing privacy concerns, he refused to elaborate on the reason for her dismissal.

Unfortunately for Williams, she may not have any legal recourse.

Texas is one of 29 states that lack bans on anti-gay job discrimination, which isn't prohibited by federal law, either. And, although case law generally protects gay teachers at public schools, experts say courts have ruled that those provisions don't apply to charter schools, even though they're taxpayer-funded.

In her initial grievance against Life School, Williams requested reinstatement. But she's since given up on that and now merely wants the termination removed from her record so she can pursue her dream of coaching basketball elsewhere.

"Basically, you're looking at a 26-year-old teacher who for the rest of her life has a black mark because she's been terminated," said Williams' fiancée, Jen DeSaegher. "She'll always have to check the 'I've been terminated' box for the rest of her career, and that's not going to go over well."

'More than just a coach'

During her three years at Life School, Williams said she received positive performance

■ COACH, Page 9

DREAM DERAILED | Nichole Williams, shown in the Life School gym, had always dreamed of coaching high school girls basketball, a dream that was about to come true. 60-day period in the Honduras, beginning last November. The most recent additions to the list of 22 are 19-year-old Shelley Hilliard, who was killed then decapitated, dismembered and burned on Oct. 23 in Detroit; and Jessica Rollon, 32, who was strangled to death in Bergamo, Italy on Oct. 30.

Roberts pointed out that when transgender people are killed, the murders are often characterized by extreme violence and "overkill." They aren't just shot, they are shot and beaten. They aren't just stabbed, they are stabbed over and over and over.

"And as long as trans people continue to be dehumanized, it will continue to happen," Roberts said. "We are real people, with real emotions. We feel love and pain and joy and sorrow, just like anyone else. But people don't see us that way. They see us as 'other,' and something besides regular human beings."

Roberts said this week that "one of the last things I did as a boy" was to attend TDOR services last year in Dallas. And after transitioning earlier this year, she said, she got involved in helping organize this year's service. And she will do it again next year, too.

"As long as we continue to be killed and brutalized, we will continue to have Transgender Day of Remembrance events," Roberts said. "Because everyone deserves to be mourned."

TDOR services in Dallas will be held Sunday, Nov. 20, beginning at 6:30 p.m. at the Interfaith Peace Chapel at Cathedral of Hope, 5910 Cedar Springs Road. The evening will include a performance by the singing group Mosaic and speeches by Rafael McDonnell with Resource Center Dallas, Roberts, Oliver Blumer and Rosemarie Odom.

The names of the 20 victims will be read aloud, and flowers will be placed on the podium in memory of each one. There will also be a candle-light vigil.

Blumer and Nell Gaither were co-organizers of the event with Roberts.

evaluations, promotions and even a letter of commendation from the superintendent.

Williams was also very popular among both students and parents, despite the fact that they knew she was gay in conservative Ellis County.

About 100 parents and more than 50 students at Life School Waxahachie — which has a total enrollment of roughly 300 — signed a petition calling for Williams to be reinstated.

"She is a passionate teacher who profoundly affects our children's lives on a daily basis," the petition states. "We cannot afford to lose such a valuable teacher and coach."

In response to the petition, along with a steady barrage of emails and phone calls, Life School administrators set up a meeting with parents this week. Eleven parents gathered in a classroom at Life School Waxahachie on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 15, and demanded answers about Williams' termination. But they got relatively few.

Charles Pulliam, Life School's director of human resources, and Ena Meyers, principal of the Waxahachie campus, told parents they're barred from sharing details about personnel matters and wanted to protect Williams' privacy.

"We made the decision that was right for the kids," said Pulliam, who asked the parents to trust the school with their children's safety. "I really wish I could share more, but I can't."

Pulliam made vague references to the school's mission statement and its "standards of excellence," saying his decision to terminate Williams was based on "a global view."

"I can tell you 100 percent, we did what we felt was right for Life School," he said, calling the decision "painful."

transgender brothers and sisters. Until then, we will continue to bring attention to the violence we face due to bigotry, hate, fear and even misinformation, simply for being ourselves and trying to live our lives as best we can."

Several Brite Divinity student clergy have also been active in planning and will participate in the service through music, media and readings. ■

Although he provided no details, Pulliam confirmed to the parents that Williams was terminated based solely on an incident that took place on Thursday, Oct. 13.

According to Williams' account of the incident, four volleyball players dropped by her classroom following school photographs instead of going to the remainder of their assigned class.

For Williams, it was a conference period, and she said she was in and out of the classroom. Williams maintains she repeatedly told the students they needed to go to their assigned class and that she wouldn't vouch for them.

But the students didn't leave, and they were later investigated for skipping class.

On Friday, Oct. 14, the students received one-day detentions.

On Monday, Oct. 17, Williams was placed on administrative leave, and on Tuesday, Oct. 18, she was terminated.

Williams acknowledged she should have reported the students.

"I expected to be in trouble and I knew I should have been," she said. "But to be fired, I was shocked."

The parents who signed the petition agreed, saying they feel the punishment was "extreme" and "disproportionate."

At the meeting this week, parents complained that Williams was replaced two days later by someone who is "unqualified," because he's never coached basketball or girls sports. Williams' replacement also recently resigned mid-year from an athletic director position in another district.

The parents also accused Life School officials of lying to their daughters, who were told after a volleyball game the same night Williams was fired that she was "moving on to other opportunities." The parents said they only learned of

Williams' termination from their kids.

"She's more than just a coach," one parent told Pulliam and Meyers. "She loves her students."

"I did not feel like my child was in any danger," said another parent — a man wearing a cowboy hat, Wrangler jeans and work boots who spoke with a Southern drawl. "I wish the school had a lot more leaders like her."

One parent asked point-blank whether Williams was fired due to her sexual orientation.

"What is her sexual orientation?" Pulliam responded.

"Lesbian," the parent said.

Pulliam paused at length before saying softly, "Certainly I would never consider that."

School says decision is final

Pulliam said later he wasn't aware of Williams' sexual orientation — even though it was highlighted in her grievance filed Oct. 25.

"I've only been here three months," Pulliam told Dallas Voice in a phone interview Wednesday. "I really don't know much about her other than what happened as part of this."

Pulliam said sexual orientation isn't included in Life School's employment nondiscrimination policy. However, sexual orientation does appear in sections of the school's Code of Ethics that govern employees' conduct toward colleagues and students. Regardless, experts say the policies aren't enforceable because Texas has no statute to back them up. And Pulliam denied that Williams' termination had anything to do with the fact that she's gay.

"I don't want it to be about that at all," he said. "It never has been, and I really think that's just the wrong path. We don't wish any harm on Ms. Williams whatsoever."

DeSaegher, Williams' partner, said Life School's board of directors is made up of people affiliated with conservative evangelical institutions, including Dallas Baptist University, Southwestern Assemblies of God University and The Oaks Fellowship.

But Pulliam declined to discuss the backgrounds of board members.

"It really doesn't make sense to talk about that stuff," he said. "This is about Life School doing the right thing for our students and about us looking to protect Ms. Williams and her rights."

Asked about his personal views on homosexuality, Pulliam said, "My personal opinion is not important here at all."

Pulliam also reiterated what he told the parents the night before, that Williams' termination is final and that the school won't remove it from her record.

When parents pleaded with Pulliam on Tuesday to allow Williams to move on, he admitted he had the authority to remove the termination from her record but said he wouldn't — "because I'm confident we did the right thing."

After the meeting, parents expressed frustration.

"My reaction was, I really don't feel like we got anywhere," said Jennifer McCoy. "I feel like he was dodging all of our questions."

McCoy has a son and a daughter who attend Life School Waxahachie. Her daughter, a junior who plays both volleyball and basketball, has attended Life School since fourth grade.

"I think that has a lot to do with it," McCoy said when asked if she thinks Williams was fired because she's gay. "Everything else, to me, it's not adding up at all."

Another parent, Wendy Williams, said she has four children who attend Life School, including a daughter who plays volleyball and basketball. Wendy Williams said her kids have attended Life School Waxahachie since it opened, but until now she's never had a major issue with the administration.

"I think they tried to get rid of her because she's gay," Wendy Williams said. "They can't say that, but I don't see any other reasons."

Wendy Williams said although she was raised "very conservative," she doesn't think Nichole Williams' sexual orientation should be an issue.

"I don't think it affected her coaching, and I don't think it affected her relationship with the children," Wendy Williams said. "I don't think it matters." ■

The go-to place for programs to combat bullying in schools

Mary Jo Kaska, new programming director Hope for Peace and Justice, says the organization will focus on private schools

DAVID TAFFET | Staff Writer
taffet@dallasvoice.com

Mary Jo Kaska, the new director of programming for Hope for Peace and Justice, hopes her organization becomes the go-to place for help in establishing anti-bullying policies, especially for private schools in Texas.

Right now, the biggest program at Hope for Peace and Justice is its Safe Schools Project.

"We've taken the stand that all school districts need enumerated categories," she said. "The addition of those enumerated categories spells out for young people that the kind of bullying they've seen in their schools frequently is no longer tolerated."

Kaska said that Hope for Peace and Justice is creating its own standard for an anti-bullying program that is research-based, comparing the rollout of this policy to the way Nolan High School, where she taught, introduced its harassment policy.

"We developed a code," she said. "We talked to boys and girls separately — straight on — explaining what harassment was, [how] what they did before was harassment and won't be tolerated."

She said a successful policy sets out who to go to and what happens when the rules are violated.

When that happens, she said, "suddenly a bell goes off before a student does something. It's an educational process. You're creating a safe climate, a safe culture."

The regulations articulate a set of values and a policy, she said.

While H4PJ would be happy to work with public schools that need assistance, Kaska said the organization's focus is on private schools. Despite the law passed in this year's session of the Texas Legislature, she said many private schools feel exempt because they don't receive public funding.

Mary Jo Kaska

One step in making schools safer, she Kaska, is training teachers to intervene.

"What I like about the Texas law is that it requires the whole program to be on the district website," she said.

Posting the policy she said is important for private schools too.

Once criteria are finalized, Kaska said H4PJ will be contacting private schools throughout the Dallas area first and then throughout the state. Its consulting services will be available to schools for free, and paid for by H4PJ contributors.

"Then our website will be one-stop shopping for the best anti-bullying resources," Kaska said.

"Private schools are already doing so many things right," she said, but added that some simple changes will help make schools a little bit safer.

"We want schools to be able to promote their success stories," Kaska said. "Upload videos showing things that are working. Foster student leadership and participation in developing a respectful and welcoming school environment."

Kaska was hired after group founder and president Michael Piazza moved to Atlanta earlier this year. She said that although her organization is based at Cathedral of Hope, it is incorporated as a separate non-profit organization. ■

King of rainbows

MAXED OUT | Pop artist Peter Max designed the psychedelic cover exclusively for Dallas Voice, but he's long specialized in American iconography as his subjects, including the Dallas skyline, above.

Even at 74, iconic painter Peter Max still feels part of the counterculture movement

ARNOLD WAYNE JONES | Life+Style Editor

Even though Peter Max isn't gay, for 40 years, he's been a natural fit with the gay community.

The traditional rainbow-colored Pride flag debuted in 1978, but Max has been doing rainbows since the psychedelic '60s, always with a distinctive, primary-color-field. Might he have been an influence? Even Max isn't sure.

"I am certainly aware of the [Pride flag], though I don't know if I was an influence. But if I was, I'm glad!" says the 74-year-old artist on the phone from his studio in New York.

There's no mistaking a Peter Max painting; after decades in the spotlight, he has become iconic. With his cosmic-wow, eye-catching pieces, he has long been the pop! in pop art.

Max is as famous for his commercial pieces — a 1974 postage stamp, album covers (especially The Beatles' Yellow Submarine), his "Love" poster from the 1970s, and his fascination with the Statue of Liberty — as he is for his gallery work. (Full disclosure: I've had a signed Lady Liberty poster in my office for eight years — it always gets noticed.)

"The commercial stuff is one in 100 — the other 99 times is me just dancing on the canvas. But it's often very public," he says. "But I do still identify with the counterculture movement — I'm still a hippie at heart."

He also stays in touch with his '60s roots — just recently he did another series of portraits with long-time friend Ringo Starr.

Max brings that hippie aesthetic to North Texas this weekend with two appearances: At Wisby-Smith Fine Art in the Crescent on Friday night, Nov. 18, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 19, then at Milan Gallery in Fort Worth Saturday night.

Even into his 70s, Max continues to work with the stamina of someone a fraction of his age — and he never seems to grow tired of it.

"It's natural. I come to my studio and I have a tremendous will to paint. That's amplified 100 times when I stand in front a canvas. When I pick up the brush, it's amplified 10 times more. When I touch the brush to the paint, I don't know what I'm painting — I just stand there and am amazed that a painting comes out.

"It's like a jazz musician who hasn't written down any of his songs."

So enthusiastic is Max about his art that he designed the cover of this issue exclusively for Dallas Voice.

"It's what I do. I paint, I draw, I go to gallery openings, I meet people, I have a beautiful sweetheart of a wife and I do lovely interviews like I'm doing with you. I'm most proud about all of it, from the first time I started to this very moment talking to you. I'm serious about [my art], but I want to be playful, too," Max says.

Next up for him: He's going to do some more licensing of his work — something he hasn't done in years — and plans to break into animation. But it's all good.

"When I go to my gallery shows, it's all young people," he says. "It's mind-boggling. I never dreamt my life would be like this. I love it all — every second of it."

The growing problem of workplace bullying

Bullying isn't just confined to teens; adults in the workplace are targeted, too

I recently met a remarkable woman who has a lot to say about a kind of adult bullying that hits straights as well as LGBTs, that hurts men as well as women, that harms older and less connected workers the most, and that is so pervasive it's called "The Silent Epidemic."

Esque Walker, who lives in Corsicana and drove up to Dallas recently to give a Saturday morning presentation on workplace bullying, has an undergraduate degree in health information management, a masters in healthcare/health information management and a doctorate in public policy and administration.

She also has a score of certifications and areas of expertise.

She has been working diligently for the passage of the Texas Healthy Workplace Bill, authored by Dr. David Yamada of the Workplace Bullying Institute. It's hard going, as you can imagine.

So far, Dr. Walker has been unable to even get a meeting with Gov. Rick Perry. Perhaps he is too busy campaigning. More likely, if his many aides have put her name and credentials before him, he has retreated into his good-hairyness.

Remember: He scraped through Texas A&M with Ds; she has a Ph.D.

But the governor is not the only impediment to getting this bill in place. So far, Dr. Walker and her associates have spoken with a great many Texas state senators and representatives. Not one has agreed to sponsor the bill.

Dr. Walker was herself the target of workplace bullying some years ago. But instead of simply taking the abuse — as most women and many men have done over the years — she aligned herself with others who understood the issues involved.

So, what are the issues?

To begin, Dr. Walker asserts that adult bullying is based on the bully's need for power and control. It's closely linked with competitiveness; the bully may resent the target's appearance, education, personality or any number of facets of the other person's being. He or she definitely does not want the target to advance.

So how do you know you are targeted, assuming the bully does not actually taunt or threaten you, as happens so often to children and teens?

You start with power disparity; the bully may have a higher status, longer tenure or perhaps corporate protectors to give him or her a sense of strength.

Then you look at four other criteria: repetition, duration, intensity and escalation.

Workplace bullying, says Dr. Walker, usually plays out in a predictable way. First, the bully criticizes you or gets someone above you in the pecking order to do so. Next, the bully involves others, usually four to six people who may see you as a threat or just want to curry favor with the boss.

Phyllis Guest
Taking Notes

Then, no matter what you do, it is not enough or not good enough, and coworkers are not allowed to "help" you. Eventually you are fired — after being told, "You are not a team player."

Here's how it looks by the numbers:

- 62 percent of bullies are men (who may bully other men, straight women or, of course, LGBTs).
- 58 percent of targets are women.
- 18 percent of adult suicides in the European Union are attributed to workplace bullying.
- An estimated 1 million Texans are bullied at work every year.

As the economy has worsened, pushing out older workers has become the norm; counselors report the escalation, although putting a number to the pain is virtually impossible.

So what to do if you are the target?

First, document everything, with specifics of person, time, place and comment or event. Second, do not go to your organization's human resources person or department; HR works for the company and could care less about you.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission or your union representative — if applicable — can help; the latter may be especially important in education and medicine, where power disparities and bullying are common.

The Workplace Bullying Institute (WorkPlaceBullying.org) publishes a newsletter and other materials that can offer insight plus specifics. The Dallas Public Library has books by Gary Namie and Ruth Namie, Ph.D.'s known for their groundbreaking research and writing on workplace "jerks, weasels and snakes."

And of course Out & Equal has done and continues doing great work on behalf of our community.

Final thoughts: The worst that can happen is that Texas will continue to allow vast amounts of cruelty in offices, factories, fields and stores. The best that could happen is that our next Legislature will pass the Healthy Workplace Bill, recognizing the problem, mandating anti-bullying education, and allowing victims to sue.

Meanwhile, if a workplace bully is making you frightened and depressed, find a counselor in whom you can confide. And don't wait 'til tomorrow. Do it today.

Phyllis Guest is a longtime activist on political and LGBT issues and is a member of Stonewall Democrats of Dallas.

Putting our children at risk

Child sexual abuse a concern for everyone, especially LGBT parents

Most people would probably agree there is no resource that a society cherishes more than its children. So it is hard to fathom how sexual predators manage with such apparent ease to carry out horrendous, undetected assaults on children practically under the noses of their families and others who are charged with their protection.

As horrific as the crime of child sexual abuse is, there are no firm estimates of its prevalence because it often goes undetected and is seriously underreported, according to agencies that study child abuse.

Less than 100,000 crimes of sexual abuse are reported each year because children fear telling anyone, and adults who become aware of the activity are often reluctant to contact law enforcement agencies, even though there is usually a legal requirement to do so.

With so many LGBT households now raising children, it is obviously vital that all parents be aware of the tactics used by sexual predators to seduce children without arousing the suspicion of their families, and aware of the symptoms victims of child sexual abuse exhibit.

The critical need for sustained intervention into child sexual abuse recently gained national attention following a grand jury's indictment of retired Penn State assistant football coach Jerry Sandusky on 40 counts of child sex abuse involving eight victims over a 15-year period. The victims reportedly came into contact with the now 67-year-old, married Sandusky in connection with the Second Mile, a children's charity the former football coach founded.

Although Sandusky denied, this week in an NBC interview, engaging in any type of sexual activity with the pre-pubescent boys, he acknowledged showering and "horsing around" with them after exercise. He also admitted hugging young boys and putting his hand on their legs when they sat next to him.

His admissions shocked viewers and confirmed in many minds what was already suspected — Sandusky is most likely a pedophile that has taken advantage of young boys with the unwitting complicity of their families.

It is a devastating scandal that will likely rival the one that rocked the Catholic Church a decade ago when it became known that untold numbers of Catholic Church priests sexually abused young boys and violated the trust of their families.

If the charges against Sandusky are true, the accounts by the victims portray a classic pattern of enticement and betrayal practiced by the former football coach in his pursuit of the young boys. Likewise, the lack of action by those who knew about Sandusky's alleged criminal activity parallel what often happens when the abuser commands power and respect in a community.

Much of the difficulty in combating child sexual abuse can be attributed to its relative youth in terms of public awareness about the crime. The first studies on the molestation of children began in the 1920s, and the first estimate of the prevalence of the crime was reported in 1948.

In 1974 the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect was founded, and the Child Abuse and Treatment Act was created. Since then, awareness about the problem has grown dramatically, and much more is known about deterring the crime and assisting victims of it.

Children's advocates have identified "red flags" to help parents and others protect children from sexual predators. They warn parents to be wary of someone who wants to spend more time with their children than they do, who attempts to be alone with a child, who frequently seeks physical closeness to a child such as hugging or touching, who is overly interested in the sexuality of a child, who seems to prefer the company of children to people their own age, who lacks boundaries, who regularly offers to babysit, who often gives presents or money to children, who frequently walks in on children in bathrooms or locker rooms, who frequents parks where children gather, who makes inappropriate comments about a child's appearance or who likes to photograph children.

David Webb

Signs of possible sexual abuse in children include a fear of people, places or activities, reluctance to undress, disturbed sleep, mood swings, excessive crying, fear of being touched, loss of appetite, a drastic change in school performance, bizarre themes in drawing, sexually acting out on other children, advanced sexual knowledge, use of new words for private body parts and a reversion to old behavior such as bedwetting or thumb sucking.

Aside from the moral responsibility to protect children and other weaker members of society that all people share, it is essential to intervene in child sexual abuse because of the long-lasting psychological damage it usually causes. The problems can include feelings of worthlessness, depression, anxiety, suicidal thoughts and distorted views of sexuality.

Also, victims of child sexual abuse tend to become sexual predators as adults, making it a crime that begets more crime.

The Sandusky scandal will undoubtedly lead to devastating repercussions for Penn State, for the Second Mile charity with which the former football coach is no longer affiliated and for law enforcement and university officials who became aware of concerns about the former football coach's activities and failed to act on them.

But the real tragedy — if the allegations are true — will be the lasting impact upon the victims. ■

Double standard

Since the gay community and the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation throw such fits when we feel we have been insulted or slighted (Wanda Sykes starring in a commercial chastising a group of teens using the term "so gay," Blake Shelton coming under fire for anti-gay comments and most recently Brett Ratner resigning as producer of the Oscars for using the word "fag" in what was deemed a derogatory way), I am surprised and ultimately disappointed in the double standard the Dallas Voice borrows to do business their way.

In the article "Driver's Seat" (Dallas Voice, Nov. 11), staff writer Rich Lopez actually quotes Drew Ginsburg as saying "Well, if you buy a SAAB, you're retarded."

First of all, I cannot believe he would use the quote and secondly, and more significantly, I cannot believe that a proofreader or the editor allowed this to go to print.

One would expect a certain level of professionalism, sensitivity, maturity and social responsibility to have prevented this from happening — not to mention human decency.

I hope others speak up about this, if only to raise awareness that the Voice needs to be more responsible and less hypocritical of what they don't approve of, and ultimately take more caution in the future about what goes out the public. This is irresponsible journalism and further proof that Ginsberg is a jerk.

... in a fashion

The DMA's exhibit on the fashions of Jean Paul Gaultier exudes sex appeal with a big dose of flamboyance

For a man best known for creating the Valkyrie-like conical breastplate that shot Madonna into the pop culture stratosphere, Jean Paul Gaultier is a surprisingly humble person. While he's clearly delighted to have his fashions on display — as they are at the Dallas Museum of Art in the traveling exhibit The Fashion World of Jean Paul Gaultier: From the Sidewalk to the Catwalk, which runs through February — he makes one thing plain: He does not consider fashion “art.”

“My work is not art,” he says flatly. “My job is to make clothes that have to be worn. My role is not to create in the abstract but to be inspired by the needs and desires of the people. So I am in service to that. Art is art — it is a personal vision of the artist.” He pauses, then adds with a smile, “My collections are my babies, though.”

While the designer himself may not consider his work product “art” in an academic sense, there are probably few who would agree with him. More so than most fashion designers, Jean Paul Gaultier’s style is instantly recognizable, even without seeing the label. He almost single-handedly moved the bustier from the boudoir to the arena stage, cladding Madonna in a corset for her Blonde Ambition tour in 1990, immediately making legends of them both.

It’s not just brassieres, but lace bodysuits, silk leotards, men in skirts — Gaultier takes fashion rules and sets them on their heads,

jones@dallasvoice.com

turning out wearable art (there, we said it) that is both old-fashioned, even classical, and futuristic — but always oozing sex.

“My love for fashion belongs to the fact I saw a movie from the 1940s when I was 12,” he says. “In the movie, they did a beautiful description of couture.” (Now, when he works with a film director — as he did recently with Pedro Almodovar on The Skin I Live In, or Luc Besson on several films — “it is like I return to that [moment]”.)

But really, the germ of his style was started by what a pre-teen Jean Paul found in his grandmother’s wardrobe.

“I was fascinated by the whole world of my grandmother’s closet — it was beautiful and different,” he says. “It was underwear that could be worn as outerwear. I stole my ideas from her.”

Though not just her. Gaultier was inspired by television, by old movies, by showgirls — anything that offered a view of beauty he could re-imagine on the runway.

“My definition of beauty — there’s not one type. Beauty is beauty — you can find it in different places,” he says.

It’s a keystone not only of his design style, but of the DMA’s astonishingly exciting exhibit. (Anyone who doesn’t think a Gaultier gown deserves formal museum treatment obviously hasn’t seen the show.) In just a handful of rooms, we move from camp to punk — with many, many visits to edgy haute couture.

In the first gallery, visitors are introduced to Gaultier himself, talking about his fashions via a quasi-Animatronic mannequin that captures his actual face and voice, projected with unnerving authenticity. That happens with a lot of the mannequins, some of whom seem to look back, even judge you. (One Mohawk’d man in tights and a codpiece seemed to be flirting with me; I bet he does that with all the boys.) Lanky sailor boys in striped Apache T-shirts look as if they leaped from a Tom of Finland drawing; that cone bra is also unmistakable.

Walk further, and the second room oozes the dark romance of a bordello, approximating (with its window-like display cases) the red-light district of Amsterdam. “I think when you exit this room, they should give you a cigarette,” I told another patron. She didn’t disagree.

Another room shows the movement of the pieces, sort of, with a moving catwalk that is like a time machine of Gaultier runway fashions, including representative designs from his famous Men in Skirts that took MOMA by storm some years ago. That’s only the most obvious example of the genderbending that is a Gaultier hallmark — and a central theme of the sexual forthrightness of the DMA’s exhibit.

“Androgyny is part of the thing that interests me,” he says, “that moment when the young can pass to adolescence [and] their beauty is between feminine and masculine at the same time. I use it to show in reality how [both sexes] can assume [the identity of the other sex]. In Scotland, you will see me in kilts and they are very masculine — it's not feminine to wear a skirt [in that context]."

That, Gaultier says, is the essence of freedom, showing that "men can cry just as well as women can fight."

And this exhibit shows that a designer can be an artist with a bold sense of sex — even if he doesn't think so. ■

JEF TINGLEY | Contributing Writer
lifestyle@dallasvoice.com

Remember on sitcoms when the family pet would die, and the parents would break the news to the kids by saying that Sparky went to live on a farm somewhere? Well, that works in the world of reality TV, too. It's not that all those fan-favorites or most-hated villains from the various seasons die, they just go to a different kind of "farm" after their 15 minutes of fame fade.

One such example is Celebrity Fashion Experience III, a one-night fashion show held recently at Lofty Spaces.

The roster for the event read like a TiVo lineup of guilty pleasure season passes: M.C. Dawn Neufeld (from VH1's Football Wives), guests Brig Van Osten (winner of Bravo's Shear Genius, Season 3); Reco Chapple (Bravo's The Fashion Show, Season 1); a collection from Nicholas D'Aurizio (Project Runway, Season 8, though he was a no-show due to a wedding conflict); and even pre-show nibbles from pastry chef Porsha Kimble, once an apprentice to Buddy Valastro of TLC's Cake Boss. Add a catfight from the Bad Girls Club, it could have been a live version of The Soup.

Luckily, guests were instead treated to special celebrity appearance by Mike Ruiz, the hunky model/director/photographer/man of many talents: He's made small screen appearances on The A-List: New York, Kathy Griffin: My Life on the D List, America's Next Top Model and RuPaul's Drag Race. While his on-camera street cred would have been reason enough for his appearance at this show, Ruiz was actually there touting his newest title: fashion designer.

"It's [J. Cheikh's] fashion line, and I was a guest creative director for Spring 2012," he explains. "My involvement sort of grew out of meeting their team at charitable events and borrowing outfits for the red carpet. Eventually we just found a way to partner."

The collection, based on the Dakar Rally (a famous off-road auto race), mixes and matches Northern African influenced textures and colors with structured European tailoring.

But the J. Cheikh collection isn't Ruiz's first time working with runway looks. He also recently created a T-shirt line (MR by Mike Ruiz) featuring beefcake images of him styled in the likes of Tom of Finland. (Funds from the shirt sales benefit one of his favorite charities: The Ali Forney Center, an organization that assists in housing for LGBT youth in New York City.)

Adding to his creative streak, Ruiz is in the midst of a book launch for his coffee table pictorial Pretty Masculine, a collection of images that deconstruct perceived ideas about masculinity.

"I wanted to combine feminine and masculine. I did things like drape beautiful floral arrangements on rugged men. It's not what you would expect a book on masculinity to be, it's not homoerotic," says Ruiz. "A lot of books for the gay community are explicit; that's not my mindset. I wanted to create a beautiful, aspirational ideal of what masculinity should be. I don't consider myself hyper-masculine or hyper-feminine; I think I am a combination of both, and wanted [the book] to manifest that." (Proceeds from Pretty Masculine benefit New York's Gay Men's Health Crisis.)

While many in Ruiz's position of being at the cusp of a burgeoning mini-empire get drunk on their own power and quest for stardom, he's stayed humble, approachable and even philanthropic, encouraging people not only to give back, but also to love themselves. That sincerity has set him apart from so many of his flash-in-the-pan reality TV brethren — he seems like the only anchored, non-bitchy regular on The A-List.

"I had a rough childhood, and as a result I have worked really hard and, you know, made my dream come true," he says. "When I see people struggling, I feel it's my responsibility to help them empower themselves. I sort of tie that into everything I do these days to pass on the messaging and help the next generation be empowered, because it took me a while to find my footing."

Footing.... Hmmm, maybe footwear will be his next world to conquer. ■

Triangles: 'The Descendants' and 'Twilight: Breaking Dawn, Part 1'

Alexander Payne is both the most aptly-named director and the least accurate: His movies are all about people enduring a fair share of pain, but his default reaction is to find humor in that. It's a great skill, of course, but one that he beats like a drum. So when his newest, The Descendants, works its story around a husband and father (George Clooney) faced with the twin tragedies of a wife in a coma and discovering she has been cheating on him ... well, sometimes pain just needs to be pain. (Payne also loves the "road trip" plot, here and in Sideways and About Schmidt; I wonder if he would even know how to make a movie set in a boardroom.)

But if The Descendants traffics in familiar territory, at least Payne knows how to paint portraits of people that ring true. Certainly Clooney — proudly showing his age as a salt-and-pepper middle-aged dad juggling his own parental ineptitude and obligations as the family patriarch — brings the proper balance of heft and comic sensibility to the role of an emotionally detached man grappling, for the first time, with the realities of connecting with other people. Come to think of it, that describes just about every other movie Alexander Payne has made. He might not show much variety, but at least he knows his limitations.

The romantic triangle in The Descendants is between two men and a dead woman; in Breaking Dawn, Part 1 — the latest in the Twilight saga — it's between a dead man (well, actually vampire Robert Pattinson) and another man (well, werewolf Taylor Lautner) and a woman (well, actually Kristen Stewart, who I think may be part mannequin). In this, the fourth film in the series, I think I may have finally figured out what I've missed all this time that every teenaged girl seemed to understand intuitively: The supernatural element is extraneous to the slow-moving romance between Bella and Edward (and the puppy-dog longing of Jacob). It's kind of the point that nothing much happens over its two hours — if it did, it might shake you from your swoon.

A new director, Bill Condon, imposed a horror-film sensibility on all the treacle, giving us both the longest wedding sequence since The Godfather and the most harrowing childbirth since Rosemary's Baby. If you can stomach author Stephanie Meyers' didactically anti-abortion subtext — and can accept how Lautner keeps his shirt on most of the time — Breaking Dawn is actually the best entry in the series to date. Go figure.

Beyond

There's so much more than the ordinary to be thankful for from Dallas restaurants

Turkey

ARNOLD WAYNE JONES | Life+Style Editor
jones@dallasvoice.com

Thanksgiving always conjures up thoughts of turkey, stuffing and pumpkin pie, and while those staples are comforting, there is so much more to an autumnal menu than those familiar standbys. And Andre Natera, executive chef at Pyramid inside the Fairmount Hotel Downtown, has come up with some inventive ways to ring in fall without cleaving to the ordinary.

Mixing it up not just for the season, but for specific plated dinner offerings on the Thanksgiving and Christmas meals, Natera's theme exudes sophisticated comfort, starting with the butternut squash bisque (available now only on Turkey Day, but hopefully on the full menu soon). A dollop of oil and slight bite from chorizo turn a simple vegetable soup into a tremendous savory experience.

But you don't need to be there on Thursday to fully appreciate the scope of the flavors, from a surprising heirloom carrot salad ($10) wrapped around goat cheese to a butter-poached lobster perched on a stone-grits-stuffed ravioli provides a whimsical — and wholly satisfying — variation on the Southern specialty of shrimp and grits. The hearty, earthen flavors of roasted lamb ($33), served with mushroom risotto and crisp Brussels sprouts, are accented by a rich Zinfandel demi-glace and pitch-perfect preparation.

As always, desserts are a winner, especially the smartly conceived pineapple upside-down cake, which turns a '70s-era dinner party joke into a robust and tangy closer. With his current fare, Natera has devised probably his best menu since coming to Pyramid: Inventive, thematically unified, intensely seasonal and executed with all the warmth of a hearth on Christmas Eve. And he did so without relying on turkey or ham. That's something to be thankful for.

Pyramid is open for brunch buffet and a plated din- ner on Thanksgiving Day ($49.95), and offers "turkeys to go" as well.

TASTING NOTES: THANKSGIVING EDITION

Many Dallas restaurants will be open on Thanksgiving, offering those who don't feel like cooking at home the chance to still enjoy a feast. Among the specials:

Craft — Prix fixe dinner including appetizers, desserts, a selection of side dishes and choice of turkey, prime rib, salmon and more for $85/adult, available 11 a.m.–8 p.m.

Nana — Both a four-course brunch and a select menu for dinner (including bottomless mimosas) are available, starting at $65/adult.

The Second Floor — Chef J Chastain has the kitchen at his Galleria restaurant going all day, with a three-course dinner from 11 a.m.–11 p.m. for $49 (add $20 for wine pairings).

Mignon — In Plano, enjoy a traditional buffet of butternut squash soup, roasted turkey, stuffing, dessert and more from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. for $40/adult.

Some restaurants have pre-Thanksgiving takeout services. The Grape will prepare a smoked Amish turkey dinner or a maple-glazed ham with all the fixin's from $165–$275 (serves up to 15). La Duni is offering its luscious cakes for pickup on Wednesday until 9 p.m. Pre-order online at LaDuni.com and get a 5 percent discount with the promo code CAKE.

The annual Beaujolais Festival, which for me has always symbolically kicked off Thanksgiving week, comes to a new locale (the new Omni Hotel) on Nov. 18, 7–9:30 p.m. You can roam around the fancy new digs while swigging some good French (and even Texas!) wines, and tasting bites from local chefs. Tickets are $55. Visit FACCDallas.com for more information. ■

Grow up!

'It's Only Life' is a cabaret, ol' chum

ARNOLD WAYNE JONES | Life+Style Editor
jones@dallasvoice.com

The DMA isn't the only Dallas institution that has Jean Paul Gaultier on its mind: Over at Theatre Too, Jeffrey Schmidt's set for the song cycle It's Only Life is dominated by a wall of coned newspaper that looks like it could put out a lot of eyes. If there's some metaphorical meaning to this design, it escapes me. This is, after all, a revue of sprightly songs by the composer John Bucchino, not a book musical telling a story that needs to be interpreted visually.

That's its blessing and its curse, though mostly a blessing. Broadway songs (and country music) are about story; pop songs are vignettes of emotional abstraction, capturing a moment, not a tale. The versatility of cabaret that it brings a storyteller's approach to pop — it's like acting in a vacuum, and writing songs that support that ethic is a Bucchino specialty.

But the cast here is almost too good, creating tiny characters for three minutes, only to abandon them for the next one. But there's no follow-through — there's not meant to be. On novelty songs like "Painting My Kitchen" and "A Contact High," Bucchino's Sondheim-esque wordplay and the lightning-fast emotional modulations by Seth Grugle and Angel Velasco, respectively, draw us instantly into a story, but sometimes a plot seems to be shoehorning its way where none belongs.

All that is really required to enjoy it, though, is a change in mindset: Think of It's Only Life not as a play, or even as a revue, but as a concert loosely orbiting around the idea of finally growing up. It starts with "The Artist at 40," a confessional worrisong about the creative process that sets the tone for what follows: I'm so busy making art / That there's no time to live / The life the art is imitating is the wise refrain.

After that, it's just a question of immersing yourself is Bucchino's playfully syncopated melodies that insert luscious phrases and unexpected lyrical bombs, delivered wonderfully by the cast of five. Darius-Anthony Robinson has a great R&B pop voice that's actually suited to the revue format of playlets in song form, especially on the centerpiece solo "Grateful," then, with a quick turn, his comic energy serves him on songs like "A Powerful Man." Erica Harte has a quirky Broadway style that always catches the ear, and Jennifer North shines on torch songs.

It's Only Life is a regrettably generic name for a musical of distinctive pleasures. Then again, don't think of it as a musical; think of it as an evening of song-filled entertainment. ■

CELEBRITY BIRTHDAY

By Jack Fertig

Troy Aikman turns 45 on Monday. The former Dallas Cowboy quarterback still makes headlines, whether for his divorce this year or the continued rumors that he's gay. In September, he threatened to assault the man behind the rumor, Skip Bayless, on a local radio show and the comments went viral. Let's not forget, he also has three Super Bowl rings.

SCORPIO Oct 23-Nov 21

Arguments at work easily get out of hand and cost you big time. Keep conversations calm and open-minded while focused on finding solutions. Take time for fun with friends to stay in balance.

SAGITTARIUS Nov 22-Dec 20

Birthdays plans are sure to go awry. Roll with the punches. With Mercury turning retrograde in your sign it seems you do nothing right. Keep a sense of humor while cleaning up mistakes.

CAPRICORN Dec 21-Jan 19

Being generous to those in need boosts your reputation and even your career. Feeling beautiful and confident can start a row at home. Clear the air, try a daring, new solution and move on.

AQUARIUS Jan 20-Feb 18

Your future plans need revision. Those changes challenge your associations. Be ready to change some of those. Don't commit to those revisions, but take time to think them through.

PISCES Feb 19-Mar 19

Professional advice helps you clear up snafus. More mix-ups make success look further away than ever. Balancing humor with responsibility, you can solve them and advance.

ARIES Mar 20-Apr 19

While you are feeling energetic, the rest of the world seems to be gumming up. Beware of rash outbursts. You will be heard more than you know, so think carefully about what you want to say.

TAURUS Apr 20-May 20

A person can get enough flirtation and sexual adventures. A sudden realization about what you really want in that department can bring focus as you turn to more serious matters.

GEMINI May 21-Jun 20

These next three weeks will have you backtracking and cleaning up. You'll be reminded of neglected promises. Take complaints seriously and make no excuses or retorts.

CANCER Jun 21-Jul 22

Sudden changes in your health are for the better, but consult a professional and review your exercise regimens. Focus on what you enjoy most about work. Colleagues will pick up on it

LEO Jul 23-Aug 22

Your playfulness and creative efforts make huge impacts on your work. That's not a good thing. Are they a constructive focus or a frivolous distraction? Channel that energy productively to go far.

VIRGO Aug 23-Sep 22

Neglected problems at home will blow up in your face. Think carefully and deal. Flawed efforts are better than none. Consider carefully any corrections offered by roommates or family.

LIBRA Sep 23-Oct 22

A homecoming offers some rude surprises. Take them in good humor and learn from them. An opportunity to heal a wounded relationship may require some changes in your routines.

THIS WEEK

Mercury is turning retrograde and there's a solar eclipse, all in Sagittarius. Be open-minded and patient. New information will make you change your mind about important matters, though it may take weeks to figure out.
